Additionally, the CCPA grants a consumer the right to request that a business that sells the consumer’s personal information, or that discloses it for a business purpose, disclose to that consumer: (1) the categories of personal information that the business collected about the consumer; (2) the categories of personal information that the business sold about the consumer and the categories of third parties to whom the personal information was sold, by category or categories of personal information for each third party to whom the personal information was sold; and (3) the categories of personal information that the business disclosed about the consumer for a business purpose. Finally, the CCPA grants a consumer the right, at any time, to direct a business that sells personal information about the consumer to third parties not to sell the consumer’s personal information (i.e., an “opt out” right). The CCPA sets out fairly detailed guidelines about how a company must communicate to consumers the right to opt out, how those companies can de-identify the data they seek to collect to work within the CCPA, and numerous other details about the safe-guarding and treatment of the at-issue data.
